Just came across a video on my feed today that shows Monesy's superstrike settings. Actuation is at 5, rapid trigger off, and haptics at 5. His settings basically make it so he does not benefit from the tech. I noticed a lot of other pros also have far from optimal settings. Just found it interesting since I turned all the settings to 1 when I got the mouse.

5 actuation and no rapid trigger? Why even play with the superstrike at that point? Might as well go to any other 2k+ hz mouse.

Maybe he likes how the haptics feel

My guess is money, but I guess that is an option. I have the mouse and I keep the haptics as low as possible.

By the way, in the same video he says he plays on 1k hz. He doesn't even optimize his polling rate

You know that 8kHz polling doesn't improve anything, right?

Yeah I agree it doesn't matter but I would think a tier 1 pro player would try anything to squeeze out any advantage they could get. It technically is lower latency even if it's not perceivable

It absolutely does. Try playing in 4k with 2 sens and 1600 dpi. 8k polling makes small micro adjustments with crosshair very smooth. Anything less than 8k you can notice a very slight jitter panning the crosshair.

So, you're just trying to make me feel bad about myself now? Seriously, I don't think I've every really noticed polling rate changes. I run 2k because I think its a good balance.

lol but yeah 2k is the move

They are literally playing with all of the reduced latency benefits of the mouse clicks removed lmfao.

Good find, think he wanted to make it feel more like a ... superlight

He's stated in the past he doesn't like rapid trigger / lower actuation on keyboards too. Lots of CS pros have tried hall effect for a few months then switched back.

I guess the reason he uses his settings is because he used the superlight 2 in the past and he wants it close to the superlight 2 click feel and actuation.

Superstrike COMPACT waiting room/VV4Pro/Tenz/Lycan

Was probably better for Logitech to NOT advertise he is using it at those settings.

Actuation at 5 completely eliminates any latency benefits.... 3 or less to see results. Personally I like 2.

Haptics at 5 is crazy too imo... way too heavy of a click feeling and it's so strong it vibrates the shell of the mouse sometimes. I use 1... the light clicks are nice and spammable and it feels good if you got knuckle joint pain from clicking your whole life lol

If you are better than average(70% of the Valorant playerbase for example is between silver and Diamond) which isn't that hard to be with todays standard you most likely already prepared to take fights so pre-tension on your mouse button already there. Especially in tacfps where you know exactly when a fight going to happen.

One of the most common reported problem people had with this new tech was accidental clicks. If you already used to have pre-tension to react as fast as possible then this tech will screw with you actually.

One of the reason why I think this ain't that much of a change for pro's shot term. Long term, with 0ms lan ping, miliseconds indeed matter a lot if they can get used to this. Tension management for those that make a living out of this built into their body already.
